Local School Girl Has Long Hair Too Beautiful To Pull

By Mildred C. Hunt Attracting more than average attention on the streets of Torrance and where ever she may go, is winsome Antoinette Thompson whose dark brown, curly hair reaches almost to the hem of her dress.

This 10 year old little miss who is a 6th grade pupil at Nativity Catholic School, is proud of her crowning glory. The rare sight of such long hair falling from the head of petite Antoinette has been the object of admiration by those who pass her on the street. She is often stopped by perfect strangers who want to touch her hair and ask questions about it.

First and foremost question usually is "little girl where did you get such beautiful, long hair?" To which the little girl replies, looking straight at you with her large, brown eyes—"God Gave It To Me."

Her mother, Mrs. LeRoy Thompson, relates that once the child's grandfather took her for a walk and was surprised to be stopped by almost nine out of ten people who admired her long hair and wanted to touch it.

Up to the present time, when she was asked how long it is, she couldn't say as the hair had not been measured until she came to the HERALD office for the picture and her mother measured its full length with a roll-out measure—the only one long enough—to find the little girl had 42 inches of hair. Added to the abundant growth of the hair goes natural waves and red highlights along with a high sheen, which is small wonder the little girl's hair attracts so much admirable attention.

Lake many other traits and talent of individuals, the source usually can be traced directly to ancestors. Such is the case of the little Torrance girl whose great grandmother lived in England and was the object of admiration during her youth because of her beautiful, long hair.
